HOME RULE.

The Bill Passes Its Second Reading in the Commons.

Which Presages a Final Victory for the Measure.

On Tuesday Evening the Vote Was Taken. The House, by a Large Majority, Opposed It. While, in the Commons, the Measure Passed by a Large Majority.

LONDON, April 22.—The members of the house of commons flocked to the house early Friday to secure seats for the final encounter over the second reading of the Irish home rule bill. In debate Mr. Gladstone said that the home rule bill was certain to pass its second reading Friday night, and that it would go to the committee May 1. This statement was received with cheers by the supporters of the measure.

Mr. Hon. Sir Henry James, liberal unionist, addressed the house in opposition to the bill. He said that the government of Ireland would be in the hands of those now forming the majority of the Irish representatives—men from the Irish gentry and the Irish middle class, whom they regarded as an English gentry.

Early in the evening the debate was monopolized by minor members. At 10 o'clock Mr. Gladstone entered hurriedly, and amidst cheers, members began to return rapidly. At 10:30 Mr. Balfour was received with cheers.

All the members had meantime taken their places, and the house waited expectantly for the final debate on the second reading.

Mr. Balfour rose shortly before 11 o'clock. A longer period had never been occupied with the second reading of the bill, he said than had been allowed for the present debate. No man, however, had dared to contend that within the narrow limits of the two islands, four assemblies, with four executives, could be operative in harmony with one imperial parliament. He, himself, could not believe that the limitation of the United States constitution could ever commend itself to the judgment of the British people.

He, therefore, would put the idea aside as not immediate to the discussion. The home rule bill had been brought forward to meet the liberal party's necessities. It was connected with Irish agitation and Irish crime. ("Hear, hear.") Never had such an important constitutional change been proposed with such timely reasons. Substantial arguments for the necessity of the measure could be enumerated on the fingers of one hand. Two of these arguments were that the union had failed and that coercion had failed.

"If you commit this great political crime," said Mr. Balfour, "you are closing the door on a irreparable national disaster, and all hopes of a peaceful and united Ireland will vanish forever."

As Mr. Gladstone rose to address the house the cheering was renewed. Like Mr. Balfour, he was in splendid form. His voice was clear and strong, and before the debate, and his movements had evidence of unusual energy and earnestness. The principal weapons of the opposition, he said, were bold assertion, persistent exaggeration, constant misstatement and copious arbitrary and baseless prophecies. True, there were many fine financial arrangements to be dealt with, but among the difficulties nothing existed which ought to shock or terrify men desirous to accomplish a great object. The opposition had evaded steadfastly the real question of the second reading—how must Ireland be governed? This bill he rejected. Lord Salisbury had asked for twenty years of coercion, but as the policy of converting Ireland into a province of Great Britain under Queen Elizabeth had failed down to the present time, what ground was there for hope that in but twenty years more it would succeed? The late government had started with a majority of 100. Neither the children nor grandchildren of this generation would see such a majority again. Yet the whole fabric of their policy had failed, and what guarantee was there that it would not fail again? The present bill sought to do away with the coercion that had lasted for centuries. Ireland's local acceptance of the present bill should cause distrust and disaffection. There had been no disaffection of the Irish mind since the door of hope had been opened.

The announcement that the bill had passed the second reading by a vote of 847 to 804 was the signal for more cheers and hat waving. There was another demonstration when Mr. Gladstone left the house. Crowds had gathered outside the building, and as the prime minister rode away he was followed by their cheers.

SENATOR STEWART.

A Bold on Silver is What He Sees in the Policy of the Administration.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Senator Wm. M. Stewart, of Nevada, is very indignant at the expressions of New York bankers who favor the issuance of bonds to replenish the gold reserve, and who oppose the extension of the life insurance of gold certificates.

Senator Stewart is one of the leading free coinage advocates in congress, and he is in the distance a radical upon silver by the present administration with a view to forcing the repeal of the silver purchasing act. He is not, however, naturally the way Secretary Carlisle refers to silver as belonging to the category of "lead, iron, or any other commodities."

Senator Stewart quotes the law and declares that there is no authority for issuing bonds under the present conditions, that the resumption act only authorizes the secretary of the treasury to issue bonds to buy silver (or gold) to an extent necessary to redeem outstanding greenbacks. He expressly declares that there is but one outstanding obligation which must be redeemed in gold, and that is the gold certificates. The greenbacks are redeemable in silver or gold.

In the opinion of Senator Stewart, and in the opinion of the administration, there will be no bonds issued at this time, as there are plenty of silver dollars with which to redeem the greenbacks and there is abundance of gold in the $100,000,000 reserve to redeem outstanding gold certificates. The inevitable, and the only thing in his mind, is to go right into the gold reserve and pay it out upon the presentation of gold certificates.

It is now plain to everybody that there will be no bonds issued. Senator Stewart reminds the administration that there is no authority for issuing bonds under any condition, merely replenish the gold reserve. "Coin," says Senator Stewart, "is the phrase or term used in describing the redemption of greenbacks, and it was wholly unnecessary to pay out gold for them. When there is not sufficient coin in the treasury for the redemption of other greenbacks or treasury notes, the secretary has the power to make up the deficiency. When there is not sufficient coin in the treasury to redeem greenbacks he may sell bonds and pay by coin for the purpose under the resumption act."

"When there isn't sufficient coin for the redemption of treasury notes issued under the act of 1893, he must sell silver for that purpose. When there is sufficient coin to redeem or to sell silver in the treasury for the purpose of redemption, he has no right to sell bonds. There is no possible authority to issue a bond issue now, and none will be made."

THE DISCOVERER'S FLEET

Anchored in the Harbors, and All Nations salute the Columbus Caravels.

FR. MONROE, Va., April 22.—The three Columbus caravels arrived here at 10:30 o'clock Friday morning, in tow of three Spanish warships, and were received with a great thunder of salutes and a display of the flags of the countries represented by the fleets, and dropped anchor at the end of the American line of vessels.

The fleet could not have been more beautiful or the scene more impressive as they came in the Roads decorated from jibboom to taffrail with the flag of the United States, and the flag of Queen Isabella standing out and fluttering in the gentle breeze.

The little fleet was tumbled about off the Virginia coast Thursday night in a lively fashion by the northeast wind that blew all day, but managed to make the capes early Friday morning, and after taking pilot aboard, proceeded in.

At the head of the fleet was the unprotected cruiser Infanta Isabel, towing the Spanish ship, the Marquis. Behind and a mile astern came the torpedo vessel, Santa Espana, with the Nina, her flagship, and the Santa Catalina, the black and white protected cruiser Regia Regente, with the Pinta. They were towed by at least a quarter of a dozen tugboats, and looked like so many ducks sitting on the water with the feathers of their tails plucked.

When off the port stars and stripes were flung out and saluted by the leader, the fort quickly responding. Before the Santa Maria was abreast of the Philadelphia, the Dutch Frigate Van Speyk ran up the Spanish colors and saluted them with thirteen rounds.
